

much of which is due to vastly accelerating exports of goods and services from the United States to developing nations led by Mexico.

One of the principal challenges facing Mexico, which President Zedillo emphasized in his comprehensive annual address to the Mexican people on September 1, is the development of a long-term economic strategy, based on a private sector-led market economy, and acceptable to a political consensus. This has become critical because in each of Mexico's last five presidential terms, beginning in 1970, a financial crisis has been precipitated by differing and often contradictory economic policies. This will be a particularly difficult challenge, as highlighted recently by the highly adversarial response by opposition members to the recent appearance before the Congress of several cabinet officers, urging continuation of President Zedillo's and Treasury Secretary's Guillermo Ortiz's economic recovery and growth program and its required budget.

Another principal issue confronting Mexico involves the escalating threat to the personal security of persons in Mexico, at all levels of society, from a growing crime wave overwhelming an ineffectual and often corrupt criminal justice system and federal, state, and local police forces increasingly led by Mexican Army officers. A leading force in criminal activity are the regional narcotics cartels, which with their vast financial resources are responsible for widespread corruption throughout the public and private sectors of Mexico, as well as in the Army which for years has led the national anti-narcotics campaign.

President Zedillo in his September 1 address emphasized to his country and its citizenry the threat represented by the prevailing climate of insecurity and from narcotics. Fundamental reform of the judicial and public security systems have been a particular priority of his administration, but he acknowledged these programs and policies had to be improved. He vowed to develop and fund additional public security measures and called on the Congress, state, and municipal governments to work closely with executive branch in this vital arena.

In Mexico's economy, the present state of the financial and commercial banking sector remains a principal obstacle to economic growth and development. The public finances of Mexico are strong, having recovered far earlier than expected from the "Crisis" thanks to a wise and timely financial assistance package led by the United States and the international financial agencies. Continuing consolidation, led by commercial banks in Spain and Canada, has been required among financial institutions which began to fall shortly after their poorly conceived and implemented privatization by the prior administration. Massive government assistance and debt assumption has been provided to the privatized financial sector, with accompanying widespread public criticism, to confront a bad debt overhang which now exceeds $50 billion and will require many years of continuing economic progress to surmount.

Mexicans traditionally have had a keen awareness and pride in their own extraordinary history. However, this admirable quality has limited development of modern democratic political institutions and the ability to develop the economic and social policies required by a young, ambitious and increasingly restive population.

The crossroads at which Mexico finds itself has been particularly well-stated in a recently published history of Mexico:

"The ordinary Mexican is no longer obsessed by the gravitational pull of the past. Intoxication with history is now more an issue for political and intellectual elites. In the midst of the Crisis, in a national mood of confusion and unease, today's Mexican is turning toward the future. And the man and woman in the street have begun to understand that, even if the lack of democracy is not Mexico's foremost problem, the country's other problems cannot be resolved without democracy. These are the issues of the past and the present and the future, including the ancient social and economic problems that Mexico has endured as "the land of inequality." Without a legitimate division of powers, the President, if he wishes, can reign as an absolute for six years. Without a solidly based and independent system of justice, the corrupted "Revolutionary Family" will continue exploiting "public posts as private property," sacking the country as it has from the days of Alemán to Salinas de Gortari. Without a truly efficient and honest civil service, neither a just system of taxation nor a way of delivering benefits directly to the poor are possible, as modes for reducing the enormous inequalities between great wealth and great poverty. Without a reliable and honest police system, the streets will be insecure and the financial influence of drug cartels will grow geometrically. Without true and effective federalism, the capital will continue to exercise a form of imperialism over the provinces and the cities. Without democracy—the ideal of Madero (and less completely of Juárez)—any economic reforms, even if they move in the right direction, will always be fragile and endangered."<sup>1</sup>

My own view of the road ahead for Mexico, at this watershed in its history, is that our neighbor has found in President Ernesto Zedillo a wise and dedicated leader whose policies, along with the present confluence of events, can produce a presidency sharing power with a representative Congress having real legislative, oversight and budgetary powers, and with an independent judiciary providing the rule of law and the fair administration of justice.

Whether Mexico is continuing on the course this paper has described will become more apparent in its crucial political year 2000 when presidential, state and municipal elections are scheduled. These will constitute a plebiscite on Mexico's emerging political system, on present economic and social policies, and on those to be followed in the next three years.

The course of present and future developments in Mexico will have profound implications for our own country and national interest. A growing and increasingly prosperous Mexico, with responsive and representative political institutions, will remove, or at least substantially reduce, many of the conflicts which have characterized our nation's historic relations with Mexico. This relationship is the most complex and wide-ranging we have with any nation, and in coming years will continue to be among our most important.

The take it or leave it approach fast track authority brought to the NAFTA and GATT agreements a few years ago led to the acceptance of trade negotiations that have damaged my home State of Mississippi and this Nation's economy, labor force, and environment. This is not an issue of free trade; I support free trade as most Members of both sides of the aisle and the President do. My opposition to fast track authority and that of many of my colleagues is part of an effort to permit Congress to have real input into the negotiation of trade agreements and the ability to properly inform the public of their possible effects.

NAFTA and other trade agreements have severely hampered Mississippi and the Nation's opportunities for faster rates of economic development. Although United States exports have increased by 26 percent to Mexico and Canada since NAFTA's enactment in 1993, imports from those regions have increased by 47 percent according to Bureau of Labor Statistics and Census Bureau data. As a result, the Nation has lost a net total of 394,835 jobs since 1993. In Mississippi alone, major employers have moved across borders, forcing 6,671 people to face unemployment and difficult transitions to lower paying jobs. Moreover, as employers use the threat of moving their businesses overseas, employees are forced to take cuts in their paychecks and health benefits that have led to a 4-percent decline in nationwide median wages since 1993.

Fast track authority would be a blank check for extending NAFTA and other international trade agreements that tend to neglect the delicate economy of small States, like Mississippi, that heavily depend on low-wage labor and manufacturing. In addition, these agreements have encouraged other countries to develop unsafe products and to ignore environmental standards. It is no mystery why the National Consumers League as well as the Nation's premier environmental organizations—the Sierra Club, the Audubon Society, the National Wildlife Federation, the World Wildlife Fund, and others—oppose fast track authority.

Granting fast track authority will send the wrong message to other nations about child labor, the environment, safety standards, and the United States willingness to support its workers. Mr. Speaker, I object to providing new fast track authority on behalf of the 6,671 Mississippians who lost their jobs since fast track was used to pass NAFTA in 1993, and I object to it in the name of my State and this Nation's future.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives late today approved House Resolution 322, which places this body on record in favor of using force against Iraq if that is necessary in order to compel Iraq to comply with U.N. IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES such weapons. While my resolution specifies that efforts should be made to resolve the problems peacefully through diplomatic means, it makes clear that if such efforts fail, the Congress supports the use of military force.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 2621, the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Authorities Act—the so-called fast track authority legislation.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that we must be certain that we eliminate Saddam Hussein's ability to produce weapons of mass destruction and the missiles which deliver them. Our resolution makes that objective clear. If we can do that peacefully through active diplomacy, that clearly is the course we should take. If diplomacy fails, however, we should use force—through multilateral cooperation with our allies, if that can be done, but unilaterally if that is our only remaining option.

The purpose of this resolution is to make it completely clear and unequivocal to Saddam Hussein and his government that the Congress supports the use of military force if that is required. There must be no doubt about the importance of continuing inspections as called for under U.N. Security Council decisions, and there must be no doubt about the resolve of the U.S. Government and of the support of the American people to take military action if that should become necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader for their support and assistance in the adoption of this resolution. I also want to thank my friend and colleague from New York, the distinguished chairman of the International Relations Committee, Mr. GILMAN, for joining me as the principal cosponsor of this resolution and for his bringing this resolution before the International Relations Committee earlier this morning. I also want to thank my friend and colleague from Indiana, the distinguished ranking Democratic member of the International Relations Committee, Mr. HAMILTON, for his strong support of the resolution and for joining as a cosponsor.

Mr. Speaker, also joining as cosponsors of this resolution are a number of our colleagues: Mr. GOSS of Florida, the chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence, Mr. YATES, Mr. HUNTER, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. SISISKY, Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. SPRATT, Mr. HORN, Mr. KING of New York, Mr. WEXLER, Mr. ROTHMAN, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA, Mr. MENENDEZ, Mr. FOLEY, and Mr. WAXMAN.

The text of our resolution as it was adopted here in the House is as follows:

H. RES. 322

Expressing the sense of the House that the United States should act to resolve this crisis with Iraq in a manner that assures full Iraqi compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions regarding the destruction of Iraq's capability to produce and deliver weapons of mass destruction, and that peaceful and diplomatic efforts should be pursued, but that if such efforts fail, multilateral military action or unilateral United States military action should be taken.

Whereas at the conclusion of the Gulf War the United States and the United Nations, acting through the Security Council, determined to find and destroy all of Iraq's capability to produce chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons and its ability to produce missiles capable of delivering such weapons of mass destruction;

Whereas in pursuit of this goal, the United Nations set up a special multinational commission of experts to oversee the completion of this task (the United Nations Special Commission—UNSCOM), and that task could and should have been accomplished within a matter of months if Iraq had cooperated with United Nations officials;

Whereas sanctions were imposed upon Iraq to insure its compliance with United Nations directives to eliminate its capability to produce weapons of mass destruction;

Whereas for 6½ years Iraq has pursued a policy of deception, lies, concealment, harassment, and intimidation in a deliberate effort to hamper the work of UNSCOM in eliminating Iraq's ability to produce and deliver weapons of mass destruction; and

Whereas recently the Government of Iraq has escalated its policy of noncompliance and continues to breach in a material way United Nations Security Council resolutions by refusing to permit United States citizens who are recognized specialists to participate as members of UNSCOM teams in carrying out in Iraq actions to implement Security Council resolutions: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that—

(1) the current crisis regarding Iraq should be resolved peacefully through diplomatic means but in a manner which assures full Iraqi compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions regarding the destruction of Iraq's capability to produce and deliver weapons of mass destruction;

(2) in the event that military means are necessary to compel Iraqi compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions, such military action should be undertaken with the broadest feasible multinational support, preferably pursuant to a decision of the United Nations Security Council; and

(3) if it is necessary, however, the United States should take military action unilaterally to compel Iraqi compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions.

THANK YOU FRED AND CINDY SALEM

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 13, 1997

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, Our Nation was built on the strength of people's generosity and support for each other. Each year in November we sit down for Thanksgiving dinner with our family and friends to reflect on life's blessings and share our appreciation for those who have given us much love, joy, and support throughout the year.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a couple, Fred and Cindy Salem, who, for the past 20 years, have provided much happiness, excitement and entertainment to both the children and adults of Mt. Morris. Although they modestly believe that they are not providing a great service, their kindness has made an enormous positive impact in their community.

For the past two decades, Fred, Cindy, and their daughter Katie have graciously welcomed thousands of people into their hearts and home inviting them to enjoy their 5 acres of land in which they build a spectacular playground. A day at the Salem's playground includes racing go-carts or driving golf carts. If you want to play 18 holes of miniature golf, it is available as well. A couple can ride to the top of a Ferris wheel and even the littlest children can enjoy themselves by taking a ride on a miniature train.

Throughout the year, they invite people to share in their magical playground where children laugh and play and adults remember the freedom and innocence of their childhood. In May and June, school children from the Mt. Morris School District go on field trips to the Salem Home. Between 40 to 80 children visit the Salems on each trip. In the summer they have a picnic and they start off the Christmas season hosting a warm and wonderful party.

At a time when there is turmoil in the world, it is nice to know that there are still people who care about the community and give unselfishly. Both adults and children have a place to get away, relax, play and have fun with their extended family. This gift to the community is priceless. Mr. Speaker, I ask today to pay tribute to a family that has given a unique, and needed gift to the town of Mt. Morris.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2159, FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PRO- GRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1998

SPEECH OF

HON. JOHN E. ENSIGN

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 12, 1997

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of regret that I am unable to vote for H.R. 2159, the 1998 Foreign Operations Appropriations Act. I strongly supported the House passed version that held spending levels to that of fiscal year 1997. The House of Representatives worked very hard to maintain a sense of fiscal responsibility with respect to foreign aid programs, which is why I was so disappointed when this legislation returned from conference with an $880 million increase in spending.

I have always been a critic of foreign aid excess, and I remain strong in my belief that we must find a way to make our international involvement more accountable to the American taxpayers and more responsive to American interests. However, I firmly believe that one of the wisest investments we can make is to the economic viability and national security of Israel. The American-Israel partnership is one that goes beyond the common political and strategic bonds. Both nations share a common set of values—values of freedom, individual responsibility, hope, and opportunity.

For many years, I have watched a determined people build a democracy under extremely difficult circumstances that more than tested their resolve. These past few years have been no exception, with the assassination of Israel's Prime Minister, Yitzhak Rabin, repeated terrorist attacks, and a very contentious election. Through it all, the people of Israel have stood strong and I commend them.

The people of the United States stand ready to help the people of Israel as they move down a road of peace, security and economic self-reliance. I strongly support aid to Israel, and was very pleased with the $3 billion appropriated for economic and military assistance to Israel. While I wholeheartedly support this funding for Israel, I cannot support the overall spending package. At a time when we are making difficult choices to balance the
